

No end in sight

The perchlorate issue just fascinates me.

At a certain point, we are supposed to be able to trust and believe in our city to do the right thing in taking care of the duties and responsibilities that we ask of people in public life.

And that is not happening here.

Every one of us is paying a surcharge on our water rates every day.

Rialto officials told us it was going toward cleanup costs, but that's not true. They have spent the millions and millions of dollars on legal fees and other litigation expenses. And we will never be reimbursed for that money ever.

We teach our kids to have some degree of confidence that our city leaders are up to the job. But look at what's happening. This is not getting any better.

It's obvious that we need a new policy here. Maybe we need new leaders as well.
